Main Argument

- Research Question:
 - Is there cross-national variation in popular preferences over policies toward different regimes? Is there variation over policies with or without international institutional approval?
- Main Findings:
 - Publics of democratic and non-democratic countries are affected by UN approval in their decision to support war.
 - Unwillingness to fight a democracy exists among citizens of democratic and non-democratic countries.
 - The effects of the democratic peace and UN approval are bigger among citizens of a democracy than citizens of a non-democracy.
